Course Description: This topic has received a lot more attention in recent years, due in no small part to a rise in the mortality rate resulting from surgical site infections (SSI's). Until recently there were no standards to follow and little detailed information available to help an engineer optimize his design to reduce infection. This seminar covers the various methods that have been used in the past and present to ventilate OR's in order to help reduce the incidence of SSI's. The results of recent ASHRAE research and an outline of the new ASHRAE/ASHE Standard 170 "Ventilation of Healthcare Facilities" will be presented. In addition to reviewing several actual hospital OR installations and Cleanroom design guidelines.
